KENTUCKY MOUNTAINEER& Type of Americans Bemarkable Fo

DECATUR, ILLINOIS, TUESDAY, JULY 13, 1896.

Their Language and Habits. When the railway was first opened through this region a young man established a fruit store at one of the stations, and as part of his stock laid in a bunch of bananas. One day a native mountaineer entered. Arrangements generally struck him with surprise, but every thing else was soon forgotten in an adhesive contemplation of the mighty aggregation of fruit. Finally he turned away with this note: "Blame me if them ain't the darnedast beans I ever seen!" While here we had occasion to extend our acquaintance with native types. Two young men came to the types. Two young men came to the hotel, bringing a bag of small, hard peaches to sell. Slim, slab-sided, stomachless and serene, mild and melancholy, they might have been lotuseaters, only the suggestion of poetry was wanting, and they had probably never tasted any satisfying plant whatsoever. Their unniterable content came not from opiates, but from their souls. If they could sell their peaches they would be happy. What they could not sell they could as well eat, and since no bargain was made on this oceasion they took chairs on the hotel veranda, opened the bag and fell to. One of us tried to catch the mental attitude of the Benjamin of his tribe while the other studied his bedily pose country p' "Several hounds." Here, among other discoveries, was a linguistic one—the use of "several" in the sense of a great many, probably an innumerable multitude, as in th case of the 'coons. It appears that in part they are sprung from the early hunters who came into the mountains when game was abundant, sport unfailing, living cheap. Among them now are still-hunters, who know the haunts of bear and deer, needing no dogs. They even now prefer wild meat—even "possum" and "coon" and ground-hog—to any other. In Bell County I spent the day in the house of an aged wom-an-eighty years old, in fact-who was a lingering representative of nearly extinct type. She had never been out of the neighborhood of her birth, knew the mountains like a gar den, had whipped men in single a deer and wild turkey with her own rifle, and now, infirm, had but to sit in her cabin-door and send her trained dogs into the depths of the forests to discover the wished-for game: a fiercer woman I never looked on.—James Lane Allen, in Harper's Magazine

PRUSSIAN FORESTS The Handsome Revenue Derived From Them by the Government.

Americans, accustomed to dealing with large figures, will be struck with the small extent of the Prussian State forests, upon which so much eare and attention is bestowed and about which so much is written and printed. These cover but 6,597,000 acres. These Prussian forests, however, although less profitable than those of France, produce annually an average of 5,374,000 loads of fifty cubic feet of timber and small wood, and net to the Government annually nearly $5,000,000, or about $1.35 per acre every year. The subordinate staff of the Prussian State forests chiefly employed in their protec-tion, that is, foresters and forest guards numbers 3,783 persons, in addition to which there is an administrative staff of 807 persons, with headquarters at Berlin, 122 forest inspectors and 677 exeentive officers in charge of forest dis-tricts or ranges. This staff besides the management of the State forests, has the general control of over 3,000,000 acres of other forests, the property of various towns and villages, schools, hospitals and different public associa tions There are in Prussia, besides acres of private forests, the manage ment of which is more unrestricted There are eight forest schools in Germany and much attention is given by the youth of that country in fitting for the management of forests and for forest administration generally.-Boston

Budget.-Says the Atlanta Constitution: The small economies of the Northern peo-ple made the impression on the Southern mind that stinginess was peculiarly a Northern vice. It took a better acquaintance with the situation to re-move this impression. We have found that the man who is not above picking up a pin may give like a prince, and that the trader who clamors for last peany due him is ready to serve his riends with his purse whenever the proper occasion arises. We have seen that a wise economy places men in a without injury to their credious.

Sult, druggist, Bippus, Ind., testi-fies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle Gar one of the latest price lists of Base as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Belleville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the liver, kidney or blood: Only a half dollar a bottle at Swearingen & Hubbard's Drug Store. graphs-Judge Kelley's Picture of Liucoln-Sam Cox's Mummy-Chinese Diplomats, Washington Babies, Etc.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The Washington photographer who is making the photographs of Mrs Cleveland has a small fortune in it. He refuses to tell how he got his negative, but Mrs. Cleveland's pictures are selling here faster than those of any other public person for years, and his sales run high into the tens of thousands. The pictures are bust pictures taken of Miss Folsom about a year ago They opresent her as having a fuller face than she as now, and her shoulders are clad in a plain gots twenty-five cents apiece for them of the dealers, and they are rotailed for thirty-five cents. They do not cost hun probably more than two cents apiece, and a dealer tells me that $10,000 would be a low estimate of the photographing of public men and women for the sale of their photographs to outsiders has grown into a big business, and the first and best photograph of a prominent man or woman is worth a great deal to the photographer who can get it. At Mt. Mc-Gregor the boy who took the Grant tanuly sitting on the porch just before the general's death sold 50,000 of his photographs before the funeral procession left the mountain. There are two establishments in Washington who make the bulk of their business the photographing of prominent men, for sale, and in their stores you can but pictures of all sizes and of different poses of nearly every statesman at Washington. They are very anxious to have new men of prominence come into their studios, and they send carriages for them and give them pictures free for permitting themselves to be taken. Photographs of noted ladies are as a rule hard to get, and the only two that can be bought here are those of Mrs Logan and the wife of Speaker Carlisle Mrs Logan's pictures sell A few choice rooms to ront, at 530 E. Judge Kelley is a great admirer of President

Lincoln, and he was more closely associated with him perhaps than any other man living to-day. Upon the walls of his parlor here he has photographs of this same size, elegantly framed and hung so that a good light falls upon the faces which they represent. That are Thaddeus Stevens, Henry C. Cary, Edwin M. Stanton and Judge Kelley himself. In the judge's bedroom, just back of his parlor, there will soon hang a fine engraving of Gen.

Grant, and here among these great men of the past, each of whom formed a part of Judge Kelley's soul, the father of the house will probably sit and work until death re-unites him with them. Judge Kelley came to congress in 1800, and he is now serving his thirteenth continuous term in the house of representatives. He is in perfect health and vigor. He will be renominated this year, and if he serves throughout the Fiftieth congress he will have served more years in the house of representatives than any other man in our

Mrs. Cleveland has taken Washington by storm, and I have yet to hear the first word of unfavorable criticism about her I have watched very carefully her manners in the receiving of all kinds of people. She is per-fectly at home, and she is the most beautiful roman who has been in the White House for many a long year. She is t.il and willowy with a form whose every action is graceful and at the same time dignified. She has a finely shaped head, with well moulded ica tures. Her nose and chin are prominont enough to give the tace character, and her head sits upon her shoulders with a neck that would do credit to a sculptured Venus Her hair wound up upon the crown of her head, and several bushy locks fall down over her forehead in a soit of a halt wave or cuil.

They are not bangs, nor do they cover the forehead. She has beautiful eyes of a bright hquid brown, and her features are so mobilthat she smiles easily. I watched her shake hands with the thousands upon thousands who came to greet her—She had a genuine welcome for every one, and I think her soul responded to the hand shake of every person the passed by her. At the first reception which was a kid-gloved, swallow-tailed affair, when all fashionable Washington came to size her up, she was not at all embarrassed and she seemed to appreciate without estenta you her power of being able to take care of Mrs Cleveland is prettier than any of the pictures that have been published of her. She is a little more slender than they represent her, and both senators and repreentatives have spoken of the wonderful luck of President Cleveland which has topped off his lucky career with such a beautiful bride.

Society ladies predict a very successful reign for our republican queen, and it is the eneral opinion of people here that the char acter of the administration may be greatly changed by her. President Cleveland lacks mummy, which our minister to Turkey, the Hon. Sam Cox, has sent to the National Museum. It lies flat on its back in its shell in a big glass case, just to the left of the rotunda of the museum. In the case next to it stand a Japanese nobleman and his wife, made of wax and dressed in silk, and in the cases oppo-site to it a half dozen savages from the jungles of Africa, with spears in their hands, and the wild dress of their countries upor their bodies, look at you On another side are the images of a group of life-size Esquimaux in fur clothing, and on the wall to the right is a collection of perhaps fifty castes of ho copper-colored faces of American Indians. The number proper has a mummy box about two modes thick, which fits around it almost arms are of medium size, with long taparing fingers. She has a thick coil of long brown like a glove. In the sketch which I give you the cover of the easket has a little to the left. This easket is of some light wood. It is puinted dark green, and it is as carefully made as though chiseled out by a sculptor. The mummy is five feet six mehes long, and it is exceedingly well pre-served. The arms were pressed close to the side and you see nothing of their outlines through the wrappings, which are wound tightly around the body from head to foot This nummy, while not of reyal birth, must have been a great digmtary. The body is covered with hieroglyphies and paintings in gold. The face is covered with gold leaf, and a mask of green cement is pasted over it. Shield-shaped ornaments in gold he across the breast, and on one of these is the sacred heello which the Egyptians used to worship. A sheet of cemented huen lies along the legs and gold seems to have been plenty in the family of the dead man. This minimy is in as good a condition as any of those you will find in the Boulak museum at Carro. Mr Cox got it from the American consul at Luxor on the site of old Thebes, which hes, you know, on the Nile above Carro and below the first cataract. It was sent here in the care of Mr. William V. Cox, the chief clerk of the museum and a cousin of Minister Cox. I understand that the collection of Egyptian articles in the National Museum is rapidly increasing and that it is his intention before
